Adobe Photoshop has different versions that can be installed on different computer systems. If the software is to be installed on a computer system that does not have Adobe Photoshop installed, then before the software can be installed, it will need to be updated. In most cases, the software will have a dialog box appear when you try to install it. This dialog box will alert you that there are updates available. If you are updating a computer that has a previous version of the software on it, then the dialog box will warn you that the existing software needs to be upgraded. Before you upgrade the existing software, you will need to click on the dialog box and follow the instructions. You will then be presented with a list of updates. After you have upgraded all of the updates, you can then proceed to install the new version of the software. If the software is to be installed on a computer that has a previous version installed on it, then the dialog box will warn you that there is an existing version of the software.

In the first time you open a file, you can choose to sort it by color or most recently edited. Believe it or not, in your library, each file type has a different way of sorting order. Also, secondary sorts are available for a number of the items. Your most recently edited file trumps color any day! Apple documents via the Touch Bar let you see a summary of the documents you're working on, but it also shows thumbnails of the most recently changed ones. The Touch Bar makes it easy to see your active edits in one place, enabling you to work on them all at once. Names are automatically displayed when you press F9, but you can also edit the name (or type a new one). Pressing F9 when a filename is highlighted allows you to rename the filename. (Cool touch bar tricks are even easier to forget now, for some reason.) Plus, this new feature lets you quickly switch between different files and cursors using the Touch Bar (see above). This way, if you're working on multiple files and simultaneously editing a text box (for example), you can navigate back and forth with ease. Your active file is displayed in the top left, and you can also choose among different documents via the Touch Bar options at the top. Place your cursor over the Touch Bar and you see the bottom action button options.
